Students in Henderson will be learning math in a new way this fall. The new method comes from Singapore, which for the last three decades has been a world leader in mathematics.

The idea is to change the strategy kids look at numbers, not just as symbols but the end result of different types of equations that get that number.

Henderson administrators say the system is more hands on and uses real life applications with the problems. Parents in Henderson can learn more about the math in focus method at the annual Readifest on Tuesday July 27th. Henderson county schools will be putting on a demonstration of how the system works and answering any questions parents may have.
